

For pregnant mothers in Montana, it may take months to see the effects of mercury poisoning.

Right now, in our state, power plants are poisoning the air, water and land with mercury that's dangerous to our health. With more coal-fired power plants on the way, we can't afford to live without strong limits on mercury pollution. But our Board of Environmental Review is planning to finalize weak mercury limits on October 11. Before it's too late, tell the Governor to deliver on his promise to protect our future in Montana.
